

Week 3 GJ - Saaif Ahmed

Mon (9/28/20):

I am grateful for Moes for yet again coming in clutch to save my friends and I from cooking dinner. Defrosting chicken takes way too long and it's really a pain to cook with since we are all careful with sanitation of anything the chicken touches. Seems like something that shouldn't be too much of a hassle but when cooking for 6 people you end up with a large pile of fat and skin.

Tue (9/29/20):

I am grateful that my friends can actually cook when we put our minds to it. We made curry again today, Japanese curry to be exact. The friend who usually cooks it wasn't there so other suitemates worked to cook the curry. It was a huge success and everyone was smiling at dinner. I have to make my curry that much better to match my friend's curry.

Wed (9/30/20):

I am grateful for one of the parents of my suitemates. We got a shipment of a bunch of bowls that are dishwasher safe to boot. We weren't short on bowls, we had just enough for each person. The issue is that we normally use bowls twice a day. This results in someone having to use plates for dinner. These bowls will help us with the day the day living.

Thurs (10/1/20):

I am grateful for RPI for giving flu shots for free. I got the flu in freshman year and it was incredibly painful. Especially since I caught it in finals week. COVID is a scary thing to even think about having. I don't want to have the flu and COVID at the same time because apparently that is deadly. I hope this will mitigate the chance of that happening.

Fri (10/2/20):

I am grateful for the bodily systems. I cut my hand tearing off plastic wrap so I could freeze rice. I haven't been cut that much in recent years but every time i do my blood runs way more than it used to high school. Anyway dealing with the blood getting everywhere is a pain, and not being able to wash a part of my hand easily is annoying. So I am grateful that some bodily system is there to clog that cut.