

Week 6 GJ - Saaif Ahmed

Mon (10/19/20):

I am grateful for fried rice. It's an easy dish and consumes a bunch of leftovers. Nothing goes to waste and it's something that can be made relatively quickly. Only thing is if I wasn't cooking on an electric stove I would have a much easier time since it is less responsive than a gas stove. Oh well you live and learn.

Tues (10/20/20):

I am grateful for my URP team. Prof Sawyer is really great and doing this work to help with that research is full of enjoyment. I truly feel like my work is culminating to the breakthroughs and discoveries Prof Sawyer and her team is making. I am also appreciative of how they took me on and allowed me to catch up to the methodology of their research. It helped me appreciate the work more.

Wed (10/21/20):

I am grateful for the work that my friends do for me. And by this I mean the help that they provide me. It's honestly a blessing to have them and the way in which we collaborate. I've already talked to great extent about why I like them but just now they helped me get into mental shape for my Multi test. Really just explaining the lecture notes was so pivotal to my success on that test.

Thurs (10/22/20):

I am grateful for dance. Dancing has quickly become one of, if not the best decision I've made for myself. Dancing has given me the ability to feel just remotely more confident in myself. If only I had the means to practice in a room with a mirror enough space to stretch my arms. I am really sad they chose to close out Mueller but it makes sense. But even then with our numbers I feel with proper protocol it could make sense.

Fri (10/23/20):

I am grateful for the weekend. It's hereeeeeeeeeeeeeee. This weekend I am looking forward to eating some really good food. I am also going to go on a little shopping trip, albeit against my better judgement what with the pandemic. But I'll be in there and out of there quickly so I don't think it's that bad. I will say that I am incredibly looking forward to the udon and the ramen I am going to get this weekend.
